Synopsis

Rising sea levels. Melting polar ice caps. Biodiversity loss. Food shortages resulting in war, strife and refugee crises... Every day, we are inundated with dire consequences of the climate emergency.

In the face of this threat to humanity, what do we do? Recycle? Switch to environmentally-friendly products? Be a vegan? Stop having children? What can we do?

But, despite evidence of our rapidly changing environment, why do we have such different responses to climate change? What makes one a denialist, or compels another to commit acts of civil disobedience in the name of climate justice?

What are our personal stories and struggles? Can we as individuals, and collectively, affect change? Or will politics and profit dictate the fate of this planet—our only home?

A groundbreaking interdisciplinary collaboration with artists from Japan, Malaysia, The Philippines and Singapore, The Year of No Return by Singapore theatre company The Necessary Stage seeks to unravel the complications and contradictions in humanity's responses to climate change, to question whether we live in an age of despair—or one of hope in the dark.

Journey with SIFA

As the team for The Year of No Return unite to create this production, it is a timely reminder that the threat of climate change is an equaliser that cuts across all social issues.

"It does not segregate by how much wealth you have; or your race, religion, gender, sexual orientation. It is an existential threat that compels us to assess all other social issues we care about through its lens," says Melissa Lim, General Manager of The Necessary Stage and Dramaturg for The Year of No Return.

Gaurav Kripalani, Festival Director of SIFA adds, "It is timely that The Necessary Stage has chosen to address the urgent and important concern of climate change. It is an issue that SIFA attempts to reckon with throughout this year's our programming, and The Year of No Return is significant in the way that it engages with a global discourse by galvanising actors from Singapore and all over the region. The conversation that TNS will be bringing to the stage is indeed a necessary one."

Interviews:

Playwrights Haresh Sharma and Rody Vera as well as Artistic Director Alvin Tan will be available for interviews to share more on the following topics (proposed topics):
